For COPE Park Board Candidate

walk the talk

My experiences as a husband, father, community activist and organizer have taught me that action speaks volumes.

Making progress on sustainability issues takes a personal commitment to action.

For Vancouver to mitigate the effects of climate change we are going to have to arrive on an agreed plan of action.

I will work passionately, patiently and persistently to build the solutions that will allow Vancouver to have sustainable transportation, a sustainable local food network and communities that embrace everyone.

affordable & accessible

Vancouver is blessed with an extraordinary number of community centres, parks, fitness centres, pools and recreational services.

For over 40 years COPE has fought to ensure that these services are affordable and accessible to support all kinds of families - parents with children, seniors and lower income folks across the city.

I will fight to ensure services, facilities and parks are within reach for Vancouver citizens.

engage everyone

Vancouver's communities are rich in diversity with many languages, cultures, ethnicities and ages.

Inter-cultural & inter-generational understanding needs to be deeply embedded and promoted in our consultative and planning process.

Consultation with communities must be authentic and meaningful.

I will fight to ensure that a sincere dialogue is the start of the decision-making process.
